Law and Labour Economics

The role of law in shaping labour markets and labour relations in advanced industrialised nations has become increasingly uncertain over the last two decades. From dramatic changes in judicial practice to labour market deregulation and labour law reform, nations and international organisations have chartered new paths. In an effort to understand the significance of current changes in the relationships between labour markets and labour law, we invite historical, comparative, and national or international studies for the fourth issue of the International Contributions to Labour Studies.

Please send three copies of your manuscript to Patrick Sullivan, Managing Editor, International Contributions to Labour Studies, Department of Economics, University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Indiana 46556, USA.
